

outlined in the 1994 white paper on intelligence.

journalists or infiltrating spies in newsrooms;

and explanation as may be deemed necessary".

UNAUTHORISED: The Environmental Management Inspectorate has ordered the removal of this structure in Midrand after property developers built it on a wetland.

PICTURE: CHRIS COLLINGRIDGE

Green Scorpions crack whip on developers who flout the rules

BY BOTHO MOLOSANKWE

Property developers have been identified as some of the culprits who break environmental laws in their bid to make a profit.

According to the Department of Agriculture, Conservation and Environment, developers some-environmental certification and told to alter their plans after Green Scorpions found that the planned development would be harmful to the environment.

"We are not doing it out of malice. We know that the developments have the potential to create jobs and improve the economic progress of the country. We only Livhuwani Siphuma, director for compliance at the Green Scorpions, said they had found that some environmental rules had been violated at the development.

One of the houses was being built on a wetland, which could cause the walls of the house to crack in its first year.

Samantha Braid, who also

